Avinu Malkeinu - Rabbi Label Lam

"Our Father our King, be gracious with us and answer us, though we have no worthy deeds, treat us with us charity and kindness and save us!" (Machzor)

These are concluding words of Avinu Malkeinu, which we recite on Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur and the days in between. It is based on a Talmudic account of a successful heavenly appeal launched by the great Rabbi Akiva. (Taanis 25b) It's not clear why this particular formulation proved more potent than other attempts to bring a timely rain, but it worked, so we employ an expanded adaptation on these auspicious days. Perhaps it's the balanced approach between two necessary ingredients, as we relate to our Creator as both a loving Father and a King to be feared.

The Dubno Maggid ztl had a revealing insight into Avinu Malkeinu. He wondered why the first 43 requests are boldly shouted out loud while the last one – shown above - is said in a quiet undertone. Not surprisingly he answered with a parable: A wealthy merchant was a frequent customer of a certain wholesaler. Every time he needed merchandise, he would make it his business to go first to the storage facility of this large provider of goods. He would walk proudly throughout the warehouse, pointing to various products and commanding that "I want a hundred skids of this and a gross of that and a ton of some of those over there," and the workers would scramble to fill his large orders and load his truck up with the goods he was purchasing. That's how it worked season after season and year after year.

Hard financial times began to overtake the merchant. He wanted very much to keep his fiscal failings as private as possible. Therefore he would stride confidently as was his custom onto the loading dock and go about in his usual manner of pointing and calling out for big orders until his truck was brimming. However, since his business had suffered so, he had no monies with which to pay the wholesale provider for everything now sitting in his truck. So he quietly approached the owner of the business and humbly admitted, "I have no means with which to pay now. Is it possible that you can extend me a little credit?"

The Dubno Maggid explained that so it is with us during these days when so much lies in the balance. We open our mouths with an almost a brazen familiarity, like a child who calls his father from school or camp and feels so at ease and comfortable to ask for whatever he needs, "Abba, I need new shoes! Abba, I need a new suit! Abba, please send money!" The good father always is there and ready to fulfill his child's vital requests.

However, once the child realizes the extent to which goodness is being extended to him, his heart overflows with gratitude and humility and so he surrenders himself weeping quietly in an undertone as one absolutely dependent upon and completely subservient to a king. He begs for credit and admits privately that he is utterly destitute and in need of tzedaka and chesed.
